Meet Platt Park Artist: Melinda Laz

Mariah Raymond

Melinda Laz's prints, watercolors and collages are subtle and complex, colorful and quietly striking. Plant forms emerge in many, while cityscapes, rivers, lakes and highways appear in others. In the majority of her pieces, the objects seem secondary to the shadow patterns they cast. And while the scale of the subject matter is sometimes difficult to determine, the viewpoint is consistently from above looking down, as from an airplane or high in a tree. This aerial view creates an evocative tonal interplay between forms and their shadows.

Graduating with a BFA in printmaking from Washington University in St. Louis, Laz and her husband eventually moved to Colorado in 2001. Her early body of work developed when she was given a box of enigmatic family photos from the 20s and 30s. The photographs provided both the inspiration for and the focus of her prints for several years. Using a printmaking technique called solar plate etching—a nontoxic process that uses only light and water to “etch” away at a thin layer of metal—Laz explored the concepts of origins, memory and the passage of time.

After living in Colorado for several years, she grew to appreciate the landscape and a profound shift in her work occurred. Maps, highways, crop fields, rivers and tributaries trickled into her imagery, most viewed from above. She developed an interest in the differing ways that human beings and nature affect the landscape—how a road traverses the topography versus a river. This interest evolved into an investigation of the parallels between pathways in the world and pathways within the human body. In 2009, the subjects of her prints took on a more abstract, cellular quality.

Though her heart lies closest to making art, Laz possesses a remarkable skillset in another area essential to the vitality of the Denver arts community. Her master's degree in Art Administration from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago landed her a job at DU in 2001, where she helped launch the opening of the Newman Center for Performing Arts. Since then, she has worked for an impressive number of arts-related initiatives in Denver: Denver Arts and Venues running the Doors Open Denver program; Arts for Colorado, an arts advocacy group that supports the state arts agency; and the now closed Other Side Arts, which provided subsidized artist studios and arts education programs. Laz also briefly ran parent/tot art classes in Wash Park until eventually becoming a certified elementary art teacher in 2012.

Laz and her husband have lived in Platt Park since they moved to Colorado in 2001. She says she's seen a lot of change in the neighborhood since she moved here, adding that most of it has been for the better. "This used to be an old doll museum," she said of the current Pajama Baking Company building where we met. "There were a lot of strange businesses down South Pearl Street." Laz also commented on the fact that there weren't as many families with young children in the early 2000s as there are now.

With a six-year-old daughter in the house, and a full-time job as an elementary school art teacher, Laz says time management is her greatest challenge as an artist. "Family, work, taking care of the house—somehow art making always falls to the back burner." However, she feels the lack of time is unique to this period of her life and that she'll have more time for creating art in the future.

Laz is currently without a studio and her printing press, which weighs 650 pounds and requires eight strong arms to move, is resting in her garage. She hopes to one day have a studio again with extra space where her daughter, who shows an affinity for the arts as well, can work beside her. Without her press up and running, Laz has turned to alternate art making processes, mainly watercolor and recycling old prints into collages.

Trash Update

Nick Weidner

Whether you like it or not, dumpsters in the alley are gone... The City of Denver has been replacing residential dumpsters with trash carts throughout 2014 and it was Platt Park's turn this past December.

The City's intent is to reduce the amount of illegal dumping that is attributed to dumpsters. It was incredibly convenient to stuff anything you didn't want into that big metal box in the alley. In fact, I didn't really think much about what I threw in there. As long as it fit and a crazed squirrel didn't attack me, I figured all was good.

The introduction of the new carts and removal of the dumpsters requires us, as responsible neighbors, to do a little more and think about what we are doing in the process. For those of us with east facing homes, we have to know when to put our carts on the west side of the alley. Everyone has to start thinking about what is allowed to go in those carts. We have to know when Large Item Pickup happens and what to do with our "E-waste". I've noticed that I need a larger recycling cart now, should probably be composting and need to reuse some of those boxes that seem to magically appear from Amazon.

Overall, the City has been proactive with communication by leaving detailed instructions with the new carts, placing reminders after a few weeks, and providing tools that notify you about what pickup services are scheduled for each week. In fact, you can download an app to your phone, type in your address and receive alerts the day before pickup. Just search for "Denver Trash and Recycling" in the Google or Apple app stores and download it for free. It's incredibly helpful.

For more information about schedules, what should go into your trash and recycling carts and to learn more about the services offered by the City, go to: www.denvergov.org/trashrecycling.

Neighborhood Notes

Hope the New Year is off to a roaring start for you and your household and that all (most/some/any) of your new year's goals are still on track. Personally still recovering a bit from my Bronco hangover but at least we have the Rockies...scratch that...spring to look forward to.

Due to the nature of my job (both this one and my paying one) I get to talk to people a great deal about living in Platt Park. It is always interesting to hear what people mostly love and occasionally don't about the neighborhood. Thought I share my Top Five Reasons You Love It Here and maybe a couple gripes:

1) Not the suburbs! Platt Park is heavily populated by suburban-refugees it would seem. Cookie-cutter homes, keeping up with the Jones', manicured lawns (HOA mandated), chain restaurants, commuting to work, driving everywhere...need I say more, has much to do with why so many escaped such confines to live somewhere that is the very antithesis of that.

2) Walk to everything. It's interesting that for most of us, who grew up viewing the car as being part of the iconic American dream, shedding the same is now so attractive--it is as though we are discovering anew the art of walking (and bike riding). Walking to the store, a restaurant, a shop, the park, the light rail...has become not only important but a meaningful part of our lifestyle.

3) Charm, charm, charm. Bungalows, Victorians, Tudors, mature tree lined blocks, quaint coffee shops, the park, grandma living next to the young couple with a newborn, ice cream shops, neighborhood hangouts and watering holes, farmers market, eclectic everything...Google search "Charming Neighborhood" and you might just find a picture of Platt Park.

4) Economic good sense. Small yards, smaller homes, low heating and cooling bills, close to downtown, close to the mountains, close to everything, great public transportation, less time in the car, home values always climbing it would seem—living and/or owning a home in Platt Park has proven to be maybe one of the smartest moves we've ever made.

5) A little town dropped into the middle of a city. That specific phrase is mine but it sums up what many express. If you are old enough you probably remember the Andy Griffith show about life in a picturesque small town called Mayberry located in the heart of somewhere USA. There is something we lost when the American culture moved to sprawling suburbs and bigger is better mentality. Platt Park is sort of a return to Mayberry, we just happen to be surrounded by a city—and a pretty cool one at that.

As for a few gripes...graffiti, occasional scoundrels milling about to opportunistically grab your stuff if you leave it out or a door unlocked, parking, scrapes and new construction, alley messes, coyotes and probably a few other things I missed. Yeah it's not a complete paradise but as one of my wise neighbors once calmly explained to me as he was repainting his garage door that had been recently tagged, "...not a big deal, just part of living in a urban environment"—true that.

Chances are you have your own personal list of what you love and maybe one for gripes as well. That's my list from you as I've heard it over the years. Have to say I pretty much agree—life is good here indeed.

And for a few neighborhood updates:

Need more beer did you say? Well can't see any reason not to add yet another microbrewer to our local landscape which is exactly what Owner Matthew Fuerst did opening up Grandma's House brewery right towards the end of 2014. Located at 1710 S Broadway, next to Corvus Coffee, the former home of Antique Row Market has now been transformed into Matthew's new creation, which is brewery meets...well Grandma's house. Can't say I drank a lot of beer with Grandma myself but if I did it probably would have occurred in a setting looking a lot like this—call it cozy-rocking-chair-friendly decor. Grandma's house features not only Matthew's creations but also a place aspiring craft beer makers can come feature their beers on a rotating basis. Open daily from 2:00-10:00 pm weekdays and noon till midnight on weekends.

For those of you who read The (Wash Park) Profile then you probably know a farewell is in order for Paul Kashmann who has served as editor for the venerable newspaper for 35 years. The Profile's home is next to Park Burger (617 E Jewell Ave) and no one has more been the voice of the newspaper than Paul who has given so many years to keeping us all informed on things that matter on the local level. We wish you all the best Paul with your future endeavors and thanks for the insights, witty prose and ignorance-defusing wisdom you have dispensed via the tip of the pen and stroke of the keyboard.

I'm ashamed to admit I have not been a very good composter—not for lack of trying over the years but getting into the groove of it has been filled with fits and starts (mostly fits). Fortunately for wannabes like me Denver Recycles has stepped in to my rescue. Went to DenverGov.org/DenverRecycles and ordered my big green compost bin which now sits proudly by my house in the alley. It came with a cute little "Kitchen Pail" that fits under the sink. Now I just drop most anything organic into the pail and then just dump it in the big green guy when full. Denver Recycles does the rest. Even I can probably handle that. Did you know you can compost wooden chopsticks? How about greasy pizza boxes? Who knew? Cut down on junk in your trash bin and save the planet. Costs about $100/year to join. Anybody want to buy my Aerobin 2000 compost bin by the way? Slightly used.

Been a relatively quiet fall/winter in terms of openings and closing around here but that will be changing as we move towards summer—lots on the horizon which we will tell you all about in the next couple issues. Check out the new Platt Park Peoples Association website at 3PA.org and by all means join the association—it's there to help you! Enjoy the rest of the winter, stay warm, get a compost bin and...

We'll see you around the neighborhood,

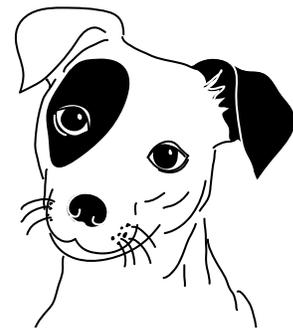

Tom Snyder

Want to Walk your Dog like a Pro?

Drew Webster, CPDT-KA

Taking your dog for a neighborhood stroll in Platt Park can be a bit of a challenge. There are a lot of ways to help your dog negotiate our skinny sidewalks and pay more attention to you on walks.

Leash training usually involves focus exercises, equipment that works for you and slowly adding distractions your dog can handle while gradually getting more difficult. Life doesn't always cooperate this way on walks.

If your dog drags you down the street perhaps you need more vigorous exercise than a slow stroll. I play Frisbee and fetch games to wear my dogs out and reserve our walks for training and bonding exercise.

Equipment can help or hinder your goals. Anything that pulls back against your dog's neck or back will trigger the opposition reflex which tells your dog to pull more, look for a harness that clips to his chest or a head collar. If you have a collar that provides a consequence when your dog pulls -- be careful. Dogs can associate the punishment with what they are looking at rather than understanding it was their pulling that caused the incident to occur. It is better to stick to positive training techniques and reinforcing behaviors you like.

Food can be fabulous. People are willing to use food rewards during puppy class but feel the dog should not need to be bribed to do things later in life. This is a bit empty if you ask me -- perfect behavior is ignored because it is expected while undesirable behavior is scolded. The difference between a bribe and reward is a bribe gets you to do something you wouldn't want to do; rewards come after behavior to give feedback for great behavior. Add a reward marker. I say "YES" when my dog earns rewards.

On your walk you have endless training opportunities. "Leave it" can be taught every time you pass something on the ground your dog wishes to investigate by asking for it, then rewarding your dog for moving away from it. "Watch me" is a great re-direct and focus command your dog could learn when you encounter other dogs. Reward your dog for walking on your side the same way you shaped the sit behavior with treats and he will begin to offer the behavior more and more on walks. Take some dog snacks on your next walk. Randomly reward behavior you love and your dog will become more and more attentive on the leash. If you encounter neighbors, get them involved. Hand them a reward and see if your dog will sit to greet them, lie down outside of a shop or show off your best trick. You may even make a new friend in the neighborhood all thanks to your four legged companion.

Remember "Dogs Do What Works", if walking slowly and paying attention to you earns random rewards, your dog will focus on you more and more as you go for walks together.

Active Minds Lecture and Discussion: Fracking and U.S. Energy Policy

Saturday, March 14, 2 pm - 3 pm
Hydraulic fracturing, or "fracking," is a controversial method of extracting previously unavailable oil and gas reserves from the ground by fracturing rock by injecting pressurized fluids. Proponents claim that it opens up vast amounts of natural gas within the U.S. and could play a key role in the United States gaining energy independence within the not too distant future. Opponents claim that the chemicals used in fracking represent a significant environmental risk to ground water and other elements of the environment. Join Active Minds as we explore the risks and benefits of fracking and put it into the broader context of U.S. Energy Policy.
